

Principles and Considerations Behind Mapping Process

Why a Regional Approach?

1. Designing an entire city of 15 districts is unwieldy and inefficient.
2. Designing district-by-district is myopic and ineffective.

Principles and Considerations Behind Mapping Process

Regional Approach:

3. Designing by regions is a compromise approach that allows teams of commissioners to appreciate both the micro and macro-level issues involved in the design of a complex and interdependent system.

Principles and Considerations Behind Mapping Process

A Regional, Ad Hoc Groups Approach:

1. A proportional division of labor among commissioners is an equitable way to divide the analytical work.
2. Permits commissioners a workable scope of analysis that allows for the growth of expertise in the understanding of quantitative and qualitative data.
3. The ad hoc setting facilitates an openness of expression and testing of ideas that is appropriate for a setting in which decision-making is not involved.

Principles and Considerations Behind Mapping Process

An Approach that Leverages Commissioner Expertise. Placed in ad-hoc regionally by:

- 1. Professional Experience: Each of our commissioners has been assigned to Regional Groups on the basis of their professional experience in and contributing to distinct areas of the City.
- 2. Lived Experience: Commissioners know the communities in which they live.
- 3. Ties by Appointee: Commissioners may have ties to particular areas of the City by virtue of their appointment.

With the release of the State's official redistricting data, staff integrates State data into LACCRC database for the design of draft maps.	The Commission meets in public to review proposed mapping starting points and develops Draft Maps for public comment.	With Draft Maps now public, the Commission holds four Public Hearings to receive input on the Draft Maps.		The Commission meets to review public comment on the Draft Maps and makes any changes deemed appropriate. Commission adopts a Final Map.	The Commission's written Final Report and Final Map are completed and submitted to the City Council.

Public meetings are shown with yellow backgrounds.
