Area councils will advise on budget

Members of neighborhood councils around the city will be given their first chance on Saturday to have input into how the city of Los Angeles spends its money.

The first Los Angeles City Budget Day is scheduled to be held from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. at the Los Angeles Convention Center to meet with Mayor James Hahn and other officials to discuss priorities for next year's budget.

Each neighborhood council was to designate a representative, but the session is open to others interested in the process, officials said. For information, call (866) LAHELPS.
